Filip Volf responded to questions regarding the effect of the BREXIT referendum on the border between Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland, particularly with regard to the political process of the United Kingdom (which includes Northern Ireland) maintaining a border between an EU member and a non-EU member. The process Mr. Volf indicated was both complicated and messy because the British Prime Minister, Theresa May, called new elections and her Tory party lost the absolute majority in the House of Commons as a consequence. The "blackmailing" of May by the DUP party of Northern Ireland has greatly weakened the UK's negotiating stance.
