

Průběh obhajoby diplomové práce:

Miss Fischerová's topic of using classical music in English class combined her two academic majors in the pedagogical faculty: music and English. Using a variety of classical music genres, activities for basic school learners were structured for either pre, during or post-listening activities. Issues were raised regarding the particular methodologies presented in the early part of the thesis which were not applied or employed in the activities of the various classical music lesson plans. Particular methodologies would have been appropriate but were not applied at all in any of the lesson plans. Miss Fischerová acknowledged this deficiency in her work. There was also a question of whether Bob Dylan was really more of a poet than a musician, and whether folk music that he has performed constituted classical music. In the end Miss Fischerová brought together a lot of music but might have done better in structuring her lesson plan in a more scholarly manner.
