Vyždření vedoucího bakalářské práce:

Irish literature can be challenging and this work focuses on a specific area: Northern Ireland as represented in novels by a Catholic (and therefore a discriminated minority) novelist. In a surprising and a curious way, Brian Moore does not focus on politics or religious discrimination in his fiction, unlike fellow Belfast-born Catholic novelist Bernard McLaverty. This unusual feature is not commented upon by Miss Varechova even though Sampson and Craig (who are the authors of secondary critical literature at Miss Varechova's disposal) refer to it. Moreover, Moore attacks the Catholic IRA in the political novel Lies of Silence rather than criticize Protestant domination or his own personal experiences of discrimination which led in part to his exile (or emigration) first to Canada and then to USA. These points aside, however, the time dedicated to the three novels and the commendable division and proper attention to the themes of the novels are handled well by Miss Varechova.

Práce splňuje základní požadavky kladené na tento typ prací, a proto ji doporučuji k ústní obhajobě.

Navrhovaná známka: velmi dobře

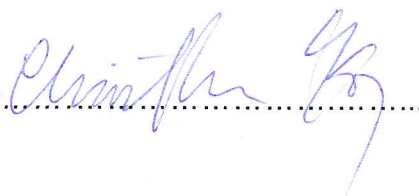

Otázky k obhajobě:

1 In your opinion, did Miss Hearne have early on any chance at all at happiness - - as she defined it - - in the plot of The Lonely Passion of Judith Hearne ?

2 What motivated Michael Dillon to take the initiation of the huge risk and disobey the IRA by informing the police authorities from the local market of the bomb in his car?

3 Who, besides members of the IRA, is more responsible for Michael's death: Moira or Michael? Explain why you think so.
